Survey of Federal Civilian Law Enforcement Functions and Authorities

Highlights of GAO-07-121, a report to the Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary and the Chairman, Subcommittee on Courts, the Internet and Intellectual Property, House of Representatives

Why GAO Did This Study

Law enforcement officers (LEOs) within the federal government play a key role in maintaining the safety and security of federal property, employees, and the general public. In this report, we describe the number of LEOs that federal civilian law enforcement components employed as of June 30, 2006; the federal job series classifications the components used to employ LEOs; and the sources of their primary legal authorities.

To identify federal components that employ LEOs, we consulted, among other sources, the Federal Citizen Information Center's Cabinet Agencies and Independent Agencies and Commissions Directory; a list of organizations included in the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC) 2004-2005 List of Agencies Trained at FLETC; and federal agencies listed in Federal Law Enforcement Officers, 2002, published by the Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS).

We identified 104 federal civilian law enforcement components and administered two Web-based surveys to each—one survey on the primary authorities and the other survey on the job series classifications. We defined an LEO as an individual authorized to perform any of four specific functions: (1) conduct criminal investigations, (2) execute search warrants, (3) make arrests, or (4) carry firearms.

What GAO Found

The 104 federal components we surveyed reported a total of 137,929 LEOs as of June 30, 2006, who were authorized to perform at least one of 4 specified law enforcement functions. These 104 components operate within 14 departments and 28 nondepartmental entities. Seven of the 104 components account for 93,263 (68 percent) of all LEOs (see fig. 1). Six of these 7 components are within the Department of Justice (DOJ) or Department of Homeland Security (DHS). DOJ and DHS accounted for 108,324 (79 percent) of the total civilian LEOs—58,489 and 49,835 respectively.

Seven Federal Law Enforcement Components with the Largest Number of LEOs

The components reported using 211 different job series classifications or titles for their LEOs. They also reported employing 121,821 LEOs under 188 Office of Personnel Management (OPM) job series classifications and 16,108 LEOs under 23 non-OPM job series or titles. The most widely used OPM job series is the 1811 criminal investigator series used by 71 different LEO components. The next three job series with the largest number of LEOs were the 1895 Customs and Border Protection officer series, the 0007 correctional officer series, and 1896 Border Patrol agent series.

All of the components cited federal statutes as a primary source of their authorities to perform law enforcement functions. Additionally, 40 components reported federal regulations, rules, or procedures as primary sources of authority. Other sources included memorandums of understanding, presidential directives, internal directives and orders, and delegation of authority from other federal agencies.

We provided a draft of this report to the 104 components included in the survey for comment. We received a number of technical comments, which we incorporated in the report where appropriate.

Law enforcement officers (LEO) within the federal government play a key role in maintaining the safety and security of federal property, employees, and the general public. You asked us to provide information on LEOs employed in the government. This report responds to your request by providing summary information on law enforcement activities and authorities for federal civilian law enforcement components. As agreed with your office, we excluded the law enforcement components of the Department of Defense and the intelligence community from the scope of our review. A more complete set of data for the components, their law enforcement missions, primary authorities, and personnel information, as reported by the components, can be viewed in an electronic supplement we are issuing concurrent with this report—GAO-07-223SP.

For purposes of this report, we defined an LEO as an individual authorized to perform any of four specific functions: conduct criminal investigations, execute search warrants, make arrests, or carry firearms. This definition is based upon our prior work, interviews with federal agencies employing LEOs, and other sources.

In this report, we describe (1) the number of LEOs that the federal components reported employing as of June 30, 2006, and the distribution of these LEOs across the civilian government; (2) the federal job series classifications the components reported that they used to employ LEOs; and (3) the sources from which these federal components reported deriving their primary statutory, regulatory, or other authorities to perform any of the four law enforcement functions cited above. You also requested that we provide information on mandatory LEO training. That work is ongoing, and as agreed with your office, we plan to provide the training information in a separate report.

To determine which federal components had LEOs, we reviewed federal law enforcement statistics and other federal law enforcement directories. To collect the LEO information on these components, we then administered two Web-based surveys—one on the primary sources of authorities cited for the specified law enforcement functions and the other on the job series classifications used for such LEOs. Copies of the two surveys can be viewed via the electronic supplement link provided in the first paragraph on page 1. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) generally determines numeric classifications for LEOs by job series and titles. In some cases, according to OPM officials, non-OPM job classifications are used where OPM has delegated to individual components the ability to classify their own job titles. All job series information in this report reflects OPM's series classification unless otherwise noted. This report contains self-reported information from each LEO component surveyed. While we did not independently verify the accuracy of the information provided to us, after receiving the completed surveys, we conducted quality control checks by analyzing the responses to identify inconsistencies and contacted survey respondents to reconcile any inconsistencies. We also returned copies of the survey responses as they appeared in our draft report to each agency for comment. Each law enforcement component was offered the opportunity to make any corrections to its original responses. A more detailed explanation of our scope and methodology is in appendix I.

Our work was conducted from January 2006 through November 2006 in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

Nearly 138,000 LEOs Employed by 104 Federal Civilian Components

The 104 federal civilian components we surveyed reported employing a total of 137,929 LEOs<sup>1</sup> as of June 30, 2006, who were authorized to perform at least one of the following four law enforcement functions: conduct criminal investigations, execute search warrants, make arrests, or carry firearms. The 104 LEO components operate within 14 departments and 28 nondepartmental entities. (App. II shows a breakdown of the 104 components by department or nondepartmental entity). Seven of the 104 civilian components account for 93,263 LEOs, or 68 percent of all LEOs, as shown in figure 1. Six of those 7 components are within either the Department of Justice (DOJ) or Department of Homeland Security (DHS), and the remaining component employs probation and pretrial services officers within the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts (AOUSC). DOJ and DHS account for a total of 108,324 (79 percent) of the total civilian LEOs, 58,489 and 49,835 respectively.

211 Different Job Series Are Used for Employing LEOs

The 104 civilian components we surveyed reported using 211 different job series classifications for employing their LEOs: 188 OPM job series and 23 non-OPM job series or titles. The components reported employing a total of 121,821 LEOs under the OPM job series and 16,108 LEOs under the non-OPM series, as of June 30, 2006. See appendix III for a list of the OPM job series and titles and appendix IV for a list of the non-OPM job series and titles by component. Figure 2 shows the four law enforcement job series with the largest number of federal LEOs, which, in total, account for 63 percent (86,712) of all LEOs. (App. V lists the job series/titles and federal components with more than 1,000 LEOs.)

OPM assigns specific numerical codes to the various job series for the purposes of identification and human resources management. OPM job series are part of occupational groups or job families that include all classes or positions at the various skill levels in a particular kind of work. As indicated in figure 2, the OPM job series reflecting the most federal civilian LEOs was the 1811 criminal investigator series. In addition to the 1811 job series, the next three job series with the largest number of LEOs were the 1895 Customs and Border Protection officer series, the 0007 correctional officer series, and 1896 Border Patrol agent series.

Several of the OPM job series, including 1811 (criminal investigator), 0083 (police officers), and 1801 (various law enforcement officers and investigators), were reported as being used across a number of different components. Other law enforcement job series were specific to particular components, such as job series 1895 Customs and Border Protection officers within DHS and job series 0462 Forestry Technician within the Department of Interior. The 1811 criminal investigator series was the most commonly used series across the LEO components we surveyed—71 of the 104 components. Table 1 shows the 15 OPM-designated job series that were reported as used by more than one LEO component.

Table 1: OPM Job Series Used by More Than One LEO Component

OPM job series<sup>a</sup>	OPM job title	Number of components using job series<sup>a</sup>

Source: Federal law enforcement component responses to GAO surveys.

<sup>b</sup>According to OPM, the difference between the 1801 and 1802 job series classifications is that 1802 positions have a support role (“perform or supervise inspectional or technical support work”) in assuring compliance with or enforcement of federal law, regulations, or other mandatory guidelines. Positions in the 1801 job series “administer, coordinate, supervise or perform inspection, investigative, analytical or advisory work.”

Among the four most widely-used OPM job series, the components reported that the law enforcement functions authorized to be performed by 1811 criminal investigators and 0083 police officers were generally consistent across those series. See appendix VI for the authorized law enforcement functions of the four most used OPM job series by component. For example, 62 of the 71 components using the 1811 job series reported that their 1811 LEOs were authorized to perform all four functions—conduct criminal investigations, execute search warrants, make arrests, and carry firearms. Similarly, the LEOs in the 0083 job series for 11 of the 15 components using that series were reported as authorized to perform all four functions.

Components using the other two most widely used OPM law enforcement job series—the 1801 general inspection series and the 0080 security administrative series—reported that the law enforcement functions their components were authorized to perform varied widely. For example, for the 18 components using the 1801 job series, 5 components reported their LEOs were authorized to perform all 4 law enforcement functions. Law enforcement functions among the other 13 components varied. Similarly, among the 13 components using the 0080 job series, 7 reported that their LEOs were authorized to conduct criminal investigations and the other 6 reported that they were not authorized to conduct criminal investigations.

Although law enforcement components responding to our survey reported using 188 different OPM job series, 153 of these job series designations were used exclusively by DOJ's Federal Bureau of Prisons (BOP). According to BOP's survey responses, 16,216 of its total of 34,200 employees are designated in the 0007 correctional officer job series. Law enforcement personnel in the 0007 job series are responsible for the correctional treatment, custody, and supervision of criminal offenders. The remaining 17,984 employees are in other occupations, including job titles such as sports specialist, chaplain, secretary, metal worker, electrician, plumber, pharmacist, language specialist, maintenance mechanic, cook, and gardener. According to BOP, these personnel also have primary responsibility for the supervision of inmates, have arrest and firearms authority, and receive annual training to reinforce the application of correctional techniques, as well as emergency procedures.

Components Cited a Wide Range of Authorities for Their Law Enforcement Functions

The 104 federal components collectively cited a wide range of sources for their primary authorities to perform any of the four specified law enforcement functions. All of the components we surveyed included federal statutes (e.g., United States Code) as a source of their primary authorities. In addition, 40 components reported authorities derived from federal regulations (e.g., Code of Federal Regulations), rules, or procedures. As shown in table 2, components also cited, for example, memorandums of understanding and cooperative agreements with other federal, state and local agencies; presidential directives and executive orders; internal directives and orders; and delegation of authority from other federal agencies, such as the General Services Administration. (See app. VII for a list of components and their reported sources of primary authorities other than federal statutory sources.) A complete list of each component's primary authorities, as reported by the components, can be viewed by clicking the e-supplement link in the first paragraph on page 1 of this report.

Agency Comments

We provided the 104 components that we surveyed with a draft of this report for comment. A number of the law enforcement components provided technical corrections, additions, and or deletions to their original responses. These technical comments were incorporated in the report where appropriate. Copies of this report are being sent to the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Attorney General. We will make copies available to others on request. This report is also available at no charge on GAO's Web site at <http://www.gao.gov>.

Appendix I: Scope and Methodology

We administered two Web-based surveys to obtain information from federal civilian components with law enforcement officers (LEO). Copies of the two surveys can be viewed via the link in the first paragraph on page 1 of this report. The first survey requested that each component state its law enforcement mission and list the primary authorities for their LEOs to perform any of the following four law enforcement functions: (1) conduct criminal investigations, (2) execute search warrants, (3) make arrests, or (4) carry firearms. The types of authorities sought through the survey were those based on statutory sources, (e.g., United States Code), regulatory sources, (e.g., Code of Federal Regulations), and other sources, such as executive orders, agency directives, or memorandums of understanding between agencies. This survey was administered between June 2006 and October 2006. We obtained a 100-percent response rate for the law enforcement authority survey.

The second survey requested that each component list the job series of the LEOs who were authorized to perform at least one of the four law enforcement functions mentioned above and the number of LEOs employed for each job series as of June 30, 2006. This survey was administered between August 2006 and October 2006. We obtained a 100-percent response rate for the job series survey.

Since our surveys were not sample surveys, there are no sampling errors. However, the practical difficulties of conducting any survey may introduce errors, commonly referred to as nonsampling errors. For example, difficulties in how a particular question is interpreted by respondents, in the sources of information that are available to respondents, or in how we processed and analyzed the responses we received can influence the accuracy of the survey results. We took steps in the development of the surveys, the data collection, and the data analysis to minimize these potential nonsampling errors and help ensure the accuracy of the answers that were obtained. An independent analyst reviewed all of the computer programs used in the processing of the data.

To help identify which types of law enforcement functions would be used to define an LEO for the purposes of our surveys, our analysis included consulting our previous work on federal law enforcement authorities and personnel,<sup>1</sup> reviewing law enforcement related documentation from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management,<sup>2</sup> and interviewing officials with expertise in law enforcement functions of various civilian agencies employing LEOs.

To determine which federal components might employ LEOs performing any of the four functions listed above, we compiled an initial list based on the federal agencies:

- listed in Federal Law Enforcement Officers, 2002, published by the Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS);
- identified as partner organizations of the Department of Homeland Security Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC), where federal law enforcement agencies agreed to train their LEOs, and other agencies included in FLETC's 2004-2005 List of Agencies Trained at FLETC; and
- listed in the Federal Citizen Information Center's Cabinet Agencies and Independent Agencies and Commissions Directory.

The term "federal law enforcement officer" can be defined in numerous ways depending on the information sought. To best meet the information needs of the requester and the time frame for reporting, it was necessary to limit our scope to law enforcement officers employed directly by the federal government as well as exclude certain agencies or components. We refined the list of federal components to survey by submitting our initial list to the components' parent departments and nondepartmental entities for corrections and additions. This compilation is not intended to reflect all personnel in the federal law enforcement community. We did not include contract services, civilian law enforcement officers and investigators within the Department of Defense (DOD) or the DOD Offices of Inspector General, intelligence agencies, and U.S. Attorneys within the Department of Justice.<sup>3</sup>

To identify the specific information to collect in our surveys, such as components' law enforcement missions, the job series classifications they use for employing their LEOs, and the types of law enforcement authorities, we conducted initial interviews with Department of Homeland Security's and Department of Justice's officials with law enforcement expertise. We developed and pretested both of our surveys with three components with diverse missions, and of varying sizes (e.g., National Park Service of the Department of Interior, Immigration and Customs Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, and the U.S. Government Accountability Office) to ensure the questions were clear and unambiguous. Upon completion of the pretest, we made necessary changes to the final surveys prior to nationwide implementation.

To help ensure sending the surveys to knowledgeable component officials (e.g., officials with legal or human resources knowledge), we requested the designated GAO liaisons of each component to identify these knowledgeable officials and provide their contact information. We also followed up with these officials to clarify survey responses, if necessary.

All of the data in this report are what were reported by the 104 civilian LEO components through our Web-based surveys. Copies of the two surveys can be viewed via the link in the first paragraph on page 1. We did not independently verify the accuracy of the information provided to us. We did, however, after receiving the completed surveys, examine the survey results and performed computer analyses to identify inconsistencies and other possible indications of error (e.g., inconsistent listing of law enforcement job series between the authority survey and the job series survey). Also, we conducted quality control checks via telephone and e-mail with the survey respondents to follow up on possible internal data inconsistencies or other issues needing clarification, such as unanswered questions or data entry errors. Where possible, we compared the law enforcement job series and number of LEOs in the job series survey with information available from the Bureau of Justice Statistics, the September 2005 Central Personnel Data File of the Office of Personnel Management, and documents collected from 27 of the components in our prior work.

We also returned copies of the survey responses as they appeared in our draft report to each agency for comment. Each law enforcement component was offered the opportunity to make any corrections to its original responses. A number of the law enforcement components provided technical corrections, additions, and or deletions to its original responses. These technical comments were incorporated in the report where appropriate.

GAO's Mission

The Government Accountability Office, the audit, evaluation and investigative arm of Congress, exists to support Congress in meeting its constitutional responsibilities and to help improve the performance and accountability of the federal government for the American people. GAO examines the use of public funds; evaluates federal programs and policies; and provides analyses, recommendations, and other assistance to help Congress make informed oversight, policy, and funding decisions. GAO's commitment to good government is reflected in its core values of accountability, integrity, and reliability.
